More Facts

- Maryland approved high standards for student participation and performance that all schools are expected to reach by 1995. In November 1990, the first Maryland School Performance Program Report was unveiled as the Schools for Success campaign began. In this first year of implementation, baseline data indicate that 15 of Maryland's school systems have already met satisfactory or excellent standards in writing, 12 in reading, 4 in math, 5 in citizenship, 23 in elementary attendance rate, 1 in secondary attendance rate, 4 in dropout rate, and 23 in promotion rate.

- The Maryland State Department of Education declared a critical teacher shortage in the certification areas of mathematics, science (chemistry, earth science, physical science and physics), special education, and trades and industry. In addition, an extraordinary teacher shortage exists in Baltimore City and the counties of Caroline, Garrett, St. Mary's, and Somerset.

- The Maryland State Department of Education provides instructional television on all Maryland public television channels from 9:30 to 2:30. New shows include T.J.'s Rights, a middle school program on the Bill of Rights; Our Chesapeake, a middle school program focused on the protection and health of the bay; StarFinder, a 30-part science series for grades 7-10 featuring astronomy, physics and the Hubble Space Telescope; and Reading Between the Lines, a 5-part reading strategies series for grades 4-6.

- The Maryland Educational Technology Network (METNET) has over 1,020 users throughout the state and 720 networked systems in Maryland schools.

More Facts

- Of the school-aged (age 6-16) homeless children in Maryland, 844 did not attend school regularly due primarily to lack of transportation, uncertainty of family plans or parents' concern for the child's safety.

  Homeless children who are eligible for kindergarten are usually withdrawn from school or never enrolled because the half-day program presents a barrier to parents looking for employment and housing and keeping scheduled appointments.

  Maryland's homeless children attend five to six different schools a year.

- Food and nutrition programs provided over $12 million in donated food to Maryland schools, charitable institutions, soup kitchens, and hospitals.

  Nutritional instruction was provided to 156,320 students and 559 educators in Maryland Public Schools.

- Nationwide, one of every seven high school diplomas was obtained through the GED program; in Maryland, the figures are one of every nine.

  One out of every 20 GED recipients pursues a college education.

- Between 1989 and 1990, average energy consumption by Maryland school systems decreased 4 percent to an average cost per student of $127.

- Over $1.8 billion has been spent on school construction since the establishment of the Maryland Public School Construction Program in 1971.

- Youth suicide prevention programs are now in place in every Maryland school system. The Youth Crisis Hotline (1-800-442-0009) is operational 24 hours a day.
